

THE OLD

McNeil
Force general was one of four
— the "Greensboro
who staged a sit-in at oolworth lunch
1960 in Greensboro,
rly spark in what
e civil rights move-e 1960s. He moved to 1 in 1970.
: means: "It is symbol-r a monument makes ome people made
fice in the past."

North Carolina A & T student Joseph A. McNeil, left, at the Woolworth lunch counter in Greensboro, N.C., February 1960.

Frederick K. Brewington
Civil rights attorney
A graduate of Northwestern University law school, Brewington, right, is a prominent attorney in private practice in the Village of Hempstead. He was the lead attorney in the case that resulted in the abolishment of the at-large voting system in the Town of Hempstead. The challenge cleared the way for the election of the first black member of the town board.
He also is a trustee and chairman of the administrative board of Church of the Good Shepherd United Methodist.
What it means: "I'm ecstatic about even being considered. I'm happy to be joining so many people who have made contributions to this community."

PHOTO BY HOWARD SCHNAPP

BLOOMBERG NEWS PHOTO, 2003

Kenneth I. Chenault
Chairman, CEO, American Express
Born in Hempstead, he attended Waldorf School in Garden City and took enrichment courses at Hempstead High School. A graduate of Harvard Law School, he is a member of several boards, including the Arthur Ashe Foundation for Urban Health and the World Trade Center Memorial Foundation.

NEWSDAY PHOTO, 2003

David A. Paterson
State senator
Paterson, who is legally blind, is a graduate of Hempstead High and the son of labor lawyer Basil Paterson. He represents Harlem in the State Senate and is the Democratic minority leader of the Senate. He is also the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor.
What it means: "I have these connections [with Hempstead] throughout my life. I think Thomas Wolfe was wrong. You can go home again."

NEWSDAY PHOTO, 2005 / THOMAS A. FERRARA

Dorothy L. Goosby
Councilwoman, civil rights advocate
Goosby was the first black woman ever to serve on the Town of Hempstead Board, where she has served since 1999. She was the lead plaintiff in the lawsuit that overturned the town's at-large voting system in 1997. She holds a master's degree from Adelphi, and is a registered dietitian.

Compiled by staff writers
William Murphy and Liette Chung

Hempstead's finest

Some have achieved fame. Others have worked in the background. But all of them have made a difference. A dozen people with strong local connections in the village of Hempstead — they grew up there, or went to local schools, or perhaps played sports — will be the first people honored on a Wall of Fame to be dedicated tonight at the recreation center at Kennedy Memorial Park. Members of the Village Hempstead Youth Council, all local teens, selected the honorees because they wanted to show others that role models are all around them.

Cynthia Diaz
Minister, attorney, judge
Diaz was the first female and Hispanic judge of the Village Court when she was appointed in 1996. She holds a law degree from Hofstra University and is a former attorney in private practice, as well as former assistant provost at Hofstra. She graduated from New York Theological Seminary with masters of divinity, where she is director of vocational discernment.

Julius "Dr. J." Erving
Pro basketball superstar and Hall of Famer
Born in Hempstead, he attended Prospect [Elementary] School. A New York Nets player for 16 years, and 16-time All-Star in the ABA and NBA, he has been repeatedly honored for his charitable efforts and his work with youth. Since retiring in 1987, he has remained very active in community service and business ventures.

NEWSDAY PHOTO, 2003

James Russo
Police chief
Russo, a graduate of Hempstead High, has been chief of police for the past 17 years. He has hired more than 50 minority officers.

NEWSDAY PHOTO, 2004 / MICHAEL E. ACH

Rob Moore
Former pro football player
A graduate of Hempstead High School and local sports legend, Moore went on to play wide receiver for the New York Jets.

ALLSPORT PHOTO

William Wheeler
Tuskegee Airman
A graduate of Howard University, Wheeler was one of the fabled Tuskegee Airmen of the all-black 332nd Fighter Group in World War II. He is a retired businessman who worked for Fairchild Republic and other companies. A Detroit native, he now lives in the village.
What it means: "I am extremely impressed. I was amazed they would come up with my name. There are so many veterans in Hempstead. It may be because I'm a Tuskegee Airman."

NEWSDAY PHOTO, 2004 / KAREN WILES STABLE

NEWSDAY PHOTO, 2001 / MOISES SAMAN

Sergio R. Arruata Anti-gang advocate