

In Landmark Settlement, Nassau County Will Implement Affordable Housing Plan Aimed at Ending Residential Segregation

The lawsuit's goal shifted in recent years toward settlement after Laura Curran, a newly installed Nassau County executive, looked to alter county housing policy, which the previous administration had resisted.

By Jason Grant | March 15, 2019 at 04:35 PM

Nassau County Executive Laura Curran, left, and attorney Frederick Brewington announce a successful resolution of fair housing litigation that has been pending against the county since 2005 during a press conference Friday in Mineola, New York. (Photo by David Handschuh/NYLJ)

After 14 years of litigation that included a year of settlement negotiations, Nassau County has agreed to implement a far-reaching affordable housing plan aimed at ending decades of alleged residential segregation between its white communities and communities of color.

This content has been archived. It is available exclusively through our partner LexisNexis®.

To view this content, please continue to Lexis Advance®.

CONTINUE TO LEXIS ADVANCE® →

<https://advance.lexis.com/api/document/citation?cite=LNSDUID-ALM-NYLAWJ->