Justice For All Town Hall: Have reforms gone far enough following George Floyd's murder?

News 12 Staff Jul 14, 2021, 7:06pmUpdated on: Jul 14, 2021, 7:10pm

0:00 / 21:03

More than one year after George Floyd's death, what has changed and what still needs to be done?

In June of 2020, Gov. Andrew Cuomo issued an executive order directing every police agency statewide to come up with reforms to modernize and strengthen its policies and procedures with an emphasis on addressing racial disparities in policing.

All departments on the island submitted plans.

MORE: Justice for All: Men of Elmont work to encourage conversations between police, community

News 12's panel of guests who are on the frontline of the reform efforts include Fred Brewington, attorney and founding member of Long Island Advocates for Police Accountability, Suffolk Legislator and retired Suffolk police detective Rob Trotta, and Emily Kaufman, a licensed clinical social worker and Long Island United to Transform Policing and Community Safety member.

COMPLETE COVERAGE: Justice for All

Police commissioners from both Suffolk and Nassau declined News 12's invitation to take part in the town hall event.